

Journal of the Georgia Public Health Association
Selina A. Smith, PhD, MDiv, Editor-in-Chief
Raymona H. Lawrence, DrPH, MPH, MCHES
Call for Papers: Student-Mentored Research
Submission Due Date: March 15, 2018

CALL FOR PAPERS

The Journal of the Georgia Public Health Association (jGPHA) announces a call for papers highlighting the public health mentored research of undergraduate, graduate, and professional students. This call is open to students currently enrolled in and those who completed their degree program on or before June 2016 at Georgia colleges and universities.

Mentoring is a dyadic, face-to-face, long-term relationship between a supervisor and a novice that fosters the mentee's professional, academic, and/or personal development. In public health, mentored research is an experienced scientist/practitioner who guides a student's experience. A few examples of mentored research include: internship/capstone, summer research, thesis, and/or dissertation.

The Editor-in-Chief invites student mentored-research and related papers in health promotion/disease prevention, community engagement, advocacy, and public health policy for its Spring 2018 issue. In addition to following jGPHA guidelines to authors, criteria for selection include:

- Statement of student-mentor relationship
- Scholarly work
- Logical organization
- Mastery of subject
- Appropriate citation documentation

ISSUE EDITOR

Raymona H. Lawrence, DrPH, MPH, MCHES, Assistant Professor of Community Health, Jiann-Ping Hsu College of Public Health, Georgia Southern University will serve as editor of the Student-Mentored Research issue.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

Full manuscripts, brief reports, research protocols, and practice notes will be accepted.

Authors are advised to review jGPHA publishing and submission information by accessing the following links:

Publishing Information | Submit a Manuscript to GPHA

Non student-mentored research submissions will be accepted for review/publication.

